STARS' DRESSING TABLES.

Two Leading Lights of the Stage Import Luxurious Bureaus.

Last autumn a couple of remarkably beautiful tables came over from Paris, the purchases of two of the most powerful young stars in the dramatic firmament. These tables had been exhibited at the French exposition and won prizes, and on their arrival in the states they were sent immediately to the theatres in New York where their owners were to open the season. As both ladies expected to enjoy large runs they had been at great pains to add all sorts of pretty comforts to their theatre dressing rooms, but their tables were little masterpieces. Both of them are of French design of the most expensive wood and decorated liberally with gold and silver inlaid patterns. One is kidney-shaped, decorated with Watteau designs, supplied with drawers and recesses of varying sizes, lined with velvet, and to deposit pomade, jewels, silver articles, etc., in them, and the lights are so arranged that electrical connections can be made not only beside and above the mirror, but a whole row of tiny footlights can be set on below, in order to cast the same shadows in the face as the stage footlights cast, and against which every precaution must be taken.

The second dressing table is a marvel in silver gilt and fine hardwood, polished by hand. The whole interior of the table is overlaid with exquisite etchings on thin inlaid plates of silver, and arrangement is such that when the fair owner travels the table shuts up as compactly as a small davenport, the legs are screwed off and the dainty convenience becomes a part of the actress' luggage.
